

Unmotivated

Name: Andrii
Age: 21
Location: Lviv, Ukraine
Occupation: Student

Goals

- Increase amount of physical activity, but without drastic changes to the routine
- Find a way to combine walking with other activities (e.g., friends, audiobooks or podcasts)
- Spend more time outdoors

Likes

- Evening walks when there are fewer people on the street
- Walks with music or podcasts
- Walks in familiar places where there is nothing to explore

Story

Andriy was born and raised in Lviv, but he knows only a few familiar routes around his apartment and the university. He is currently a fourth-year computer science student. Alongside his studies, he works as a freelancer. This allows him to rent a small one-room apartment near the university, which he has set up as a comfortable study and workspace with all the necessary equipment. This situation only reinforced his natural tendency to be a homebody. Despite his active university life and communication with his coursemates during classes, Andrii feels that he lacks physical activity and fresh air. He understands the benefits of walking, but he always finds excuses: he has to study for exams, finish a project for a client, bad weather, etc. From time to time, he tries to change the situation - he installs apps to count steps, promises his friends to join them on their walks around the city, but his enthusiasm quickly fades. In the evenings, when he does get out to walk to the nearest supermarket or coffee shop, he puts on his headphones and enjoys the music, sometimes even making a small hook, but only if he is in the mood for that extra distance.

Traits

Homebody — loves and appreciates the comfort of his own home.
Procrastinator — procrastinates in the absence of motivation.
Organized — likes specific goals.
Flexible — chooses routes of different lengths depending on his mood.

Needs

- Motivation to leave the house even without an urgent need
- Creating a reason for walking
- Possibility to combine walking with favorite hobbies

Pain points

- No clear reason to go out
- Unwillingness to go for a walk if there is no company
- Comfort of home space seems more attractive than going out

Behavior patterns

- Goes out only if there is a purpose (groceries, meeting friends)
- Sometimes can spontaneously choose a longer route home, if in the mood
- Often postpones going out unless it is urgent

Dislikes

- Wandering aimlessly around the city
- Leaving the house without a specific reason
- Interacting with a lot of strangers on the street
